Moaayd is the driver of a mobile clinic for the Palestine Red Crescent Society (PRCS) operating in the Jordan Valley of the West unities face a lot of Ve should be providing es at least three times ve cover communities icts of the Jordan Valley only so much we can do.

Bank. He has been part of the team for 10 years, working with communities in remote areas that depend on mobile clinics for access to primary health care. The communities face obstacles to planning and development, demolition orders that make their lives and livelihoods precarious and uncertain, and the under-provision of basic services.

"These communities face a lot of violations. The Red Crescent tried four times to assist with building six houses to provide emergency shelter, but each time the houses were demolished... We should be providing health services at least three times a week, but we cover communities in three districts of the Jordan Valley and there is only so much we cando. To reach all communities, the mobile clinic needs to serve two or three communities at a time. Here in Khirbet Al-Meiteh, some people need to walk half an hour from nearby communities to reach us," Moaayd comments.

experience too. When the community faced demolitions, I was there to help. Despite all our confirmation described and the community faced demolitions, I was there to help. Despite all our confirmation described and the community faced demolitions, I was there to help. Despite all our confirmation described and the community faced demolitions, I was there to help. Despite all our confirmation described and the community faced demolitions are confirmation described as a confirmation described and the community faced demolitions are confirmation described as a confirmation described and the community faced demolitions are confirmation described as a confirmation described and the community faced demolitions are confirmation described as a confirmation described and the community faced demolitions are confirmation described as a confirmation described and the confirmation described as a confirmation described as a confirmation described as a confirmation described and the confirmation described as a confirmation described as a