

In July 2014, WHO launched its first Consolidated guidelines on HIV prevention, diagnosis, treatment and care for key populations (available in English) and Policy brief (available also in Arabic).

The guidelines are comprehensive and cover recommendations for key populations across the HIV continuum of care. They also outline and address the critical enablers to overcome the barriers for key populations to access the services they need, including case examples of good practices for service delivery, and linking the health sector and community-based HIV responses.
