

Addressing the silent impact of war: WHO expands mental health care services across Syria

27 March 2017 – The conflict in Syria is taking its toll on the population, with more people showing signs of mental health disorders, ranging from mild to severe. More than half of all Syrians are estimated to be in need of mental health and psychosocial support services, and one in 4 children is at risk of a developing mental health disorder.

Read the full story

Wednesday 10th of April 2024 09:23:56 AM