

Many countries lack the human resources needed to deliver essential health interventions for a number of reasons, including limited production capacity, migration of health workers within and across countries, poor mix of skills and gender imbalances. The formulation of national policies and plans in pursuit of health workforce development goals requires sound information and evidence. This paper discusses a number of dimensions for improving the global evidence base on human resources for health.

Article download

[Global efforts for strengthening the information and evidence base on human resources for health. Spotlight on statistics \[pdf 273.52kb\]](#)

Saturday 17th of May 2025 03:29:21 PM