26 May 2019 - Over the past 8 years, people in Libya have fled violence and destruction. Many now live in settlements for displaced people, while others living in their hometowns struggle to access medical care.

With support from European Civil Protection and Humanitarian Aid Operations (ECHO) and the Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA), WHO Libya sends emergency medical teams to far-flung areas of Libya every week to help thousands of patients.

A WHO mobile clinic in an isolated area in the east of Libya. WHO Libya sends emergency medical teams to reach patients in camps and remote areas.

In the town of Tawergha, a doctor from a WHO emergency team treats a young patient's skin boil. The sandflies that carry the leishmaniasis disease thrive in rubble caused by wars.

3 /9

Diangangas puntas superior and and and and and and and a superior and a superior ern Libya, perform surgery. ECHO supports several WHO medical the state of the provide the providence of the p

af 4 Rely Capito war and many load terminang htitleid, and to cat do cat do cat a second says a Die Samaid as sa

Ailogid gvitbeathrean cat at a ssts coupont a cheby OF Aat is is ettlement for displaced people in Ajdabiya, papiedian on an -CHO-supported team in the far southwest of Libya checks a young

An obstetric rates and visit of transio 250 them 55 by a holds a newborn.