

The Palestinian National Institute of Public Health, a WHO project, works closely with the Palestinian health authorities to support efforts to build a more resilient health system. The Institute produces evidence for informed health policy decisions and aims to strengthen data collection, and the utilization of evidence and best practice by the Ministry of Health and health policymakers, including through the establishment of e-registries for cause of death, cancer, maternal and child health, road traffic collisions and mammography screening. The Institute has also developed geographic information systems for health care and health outcomes mapping, and national human resources for health observatory.
